

POISON DASHED AWAY

Mary Citrene's Hand Stayed as She Was Attempting Suicide.

Despondent Because Her Lover Had Deserted Her.

He Said He Wanted to Marry a Girl with More Money.

Jilted by the man she loved and who betrayed her, out of work, penniless and spurned by her acquaintances, Mary Citrene, a twenty-one-year-old Polish girl, tried to commit suicide by taking poison at 135 Ridge street early this morning. That she did not succeed was due to the prompt action of Sarah Riba, who had taken the girl in and given her temporary shelter.

Just as the cup of poison was at the girl's lips, Miss Riba dashed it away, and calling lustily for help, attracted Police Officer John O'Regan, of the Union Market station, to the scene.

The girl was at once placed under arrest and later was imprisoned in the Essex Market Police Court. The Justice, after hearing her story in part, gave her a lecture and sent her home. She was in love with her cousin, Julius Dvorin, and her affections seemed to be reciprocated. At her request her sister sent over to the old country for Julius, and he was here only a short time when he was jilted by Mary.

She went to live with her sister at 94 Essex street. There Julius visited her every day, and under promise of marriage, he won her confidence. He lost his position as clockmaker, and she, who worked at shirtmaking, gave up her money from time to time, as she says, to support himself.

Some time ago, he obtained employment again and then his love began to cool. Finally he cast her off altogether, saying that he wanted to marry a girl who had lots of money. Her sister gave up the apartments in Essex street to move over to New Jersey and then Mary was alone.

With $16 in her pockets, all the money she possessed, she started out yesterday morning to seek a lawyer in order to compel Julius to marry her. On the journey she lost the money, and then gave way to despair.

It was about 1 o'clock this morning that she conceived the idea of ending her life. She had Paris green in the house, and was in the act of taking it when she stated, the poison was dashed from her lips.

"What is the use of living," she said by way of apology to an "Evening World" reporter later, "I have lost everything, why live longer?"

FEARED A DISPOSITION.

But Mrs. Sander's Relatives Deny That She Committed Suicide.

Haunted by the fear of being disappointed for nonpayment of rent, Mrs. Elizabeth Sander, of 177 Avenue A, became ill a few days ago. She brooded over the poverty which surrounded her home, until finally her mind began to wander. Now her dead body lies at Bellevue Hospital.

Her husband, son, and all the neighbors in the vicinity of the four-story and basement tenement in which she lived deny that she committed suicide. Certain it is that at 3 o'clock this morning her bruised body was found on the sidewalk in front of her residence. She had either jumped or fallen from the third-story window.

Charles Sander, who arrived in this country forty-three years ago from Germany, with his wife and mother, the latter now over ninety years old, in the Avenue A house. He gave up wood-carving years ago and obtained work in a piano factory on West Thirty-fifth street. Six months ago the concern closed down, and he has been out of work ever since. He was poor, and the family have lived since on the $150 which his son George has earned in a paper-box factory.

He fell behind in his rent, but Mrs. Sander, who leased the place, told him not to worry, that he could pay her when he got work again. May 1, however, Mrs. Sander, who had a new agent look possession, told him the groundless fear that the latter would not then out that made Mrs. Sander ill.

Four days ago she complained of being sick, but not enough money in the house to employ a physician, but yesterday the husband arranged to take her to a doctor. All yesterday afternoon she complained of feeling dizzy, and that her head ached. She seemed so ill that her husband decided to stay up with her all night.

At nearly 3 o'clock this morning when she arose from a lounge upon which she had been lying and asked her husband to leave the window, as that she could go to bed, he told her that she could go to bed, but that he would stay up with her. She complied, and while he lay on the lounge she sat by the open window. In a few moments he was asleep, but was suddenly awakened by a cry for help.

In a half-drowsy manner he asked his wife who was the woman crying for help. On receiving no answer, he turned around, and missing her, he rushed to the window. His wife was lying on the sidewalk.

The whole neighborhood was awakened by her screams, and the husband, who was the first to reach her, found that both had been broken by the fall. Her face was also badly disfigured, and the physician at Bellevue Hospital, where she was taken in an ambulance, almost immediately said she was injured internally and could not live. She died at 5 o'clock.

The window out of which the woman went is large and the bottom of the sash is fully three feet from the floor. It does not seem likely that she fell out. She was fifty-five years old.

Her husband's relatives are poor as he, but friends and neighbors will probably look after the funeral arrangements. The grief of Mrs. Sander's mother-in-law was pitiable to witness.

Inquiring into Kemp's Suicide.

Conner Creamer, of Williamsburg, and a jury held an inquest today in the case of John R. Kemp, a varnisher, forty years old, who cut his throat at his room at 26 Franklin street, yesterday, and died a little later in the Eastern District Hospital. Kemp has been out of work some time because of ill health, and it is supposed he killed himself in a fit of despondency.

MAN FOUND DEAD IN HOTEL.

Gas Turned On and the Window Tightly Closed.

Circumstances Indicate that "F. Lewis" is a Suicide.

A man about twenty-five years old, who registered at the Powers House, 27 Third avenue, a few days ago, as "F. Lewis, Brooklyn," was found dead in bed this morning in a little room on the fourth floor of the hotel.

The windows and transoms were tightly closed and the gas was turned full on. Everything seems to indicate that the man committed suicide. Clerk Sarunk, of the hotel, discovered that the man was dead when he went to the lodge's room to call him. The stranger registered at the house last Thursday. He was poorly dressed and apparently paid the last 10 cents he had in the world when he engaged a room.

He never talked with people in the house, being out at 5 o'clock in the morning. He returned at night and went at once to his room. Last night he was found as usual at 9 o'clock. That was the last seen of him alive.

The only thing found in his room was a pocketbook. There was nothing to identify the man. The hotel people do not know him.

On his washstand was a bottle containing some cholera medicine, purchased at the pharmacy at Bellevue Hospital, and a bottle of carbolic acid. Twenty-three letters and cards were found.

On the bottle found on the washstand was the number "2437" and the letters "G. M."

At the Belmont Dispensary it was said that the number corresponded to the record of a bottle of cholera mixture sold to a man who said his name was John Parker, an Englishman, thirty-three years old, whose occupation was that of a circus tumbler.

He gave his residence as 138 Third avenue. The medicine was bought April 7. Another man, who gave the name of Annap Hill, a Russian, a tailor, twenty-nine years old, of 236 Delancey street, obtained the same prescription on the afternoon of April 6.

Job Parker occupied the room in which the body was found, while the circus tumbler, John Parker, however, went back to England last month because his leaving didn't take with the American audience.

Therefore the dead man isn't Parker, according to Sarunk. He is also sure that Aaron Hill never patronized the hotel.
